Archbishop John Carroll High School is located in a historical suburb of Philadelphia. The campus has a strong modern atmosphere. There are separate art museums, art centers, theatres, film and television production studios located on campus. For a long time, the school has been committed to cultivating leaders with both moral and technological strength. The school has a Diocesan Scholar program, in which students can take university courses in grade 12, and has a close relationship with Cabrini College. The school's multidisciplinary research room, Thomas Nedelka English studio, library studio and business research studio provide additional upgrade courses for outstanding students. The school provides SAT and ACT preparatory courses, and is an official registered examination venue for SAT, ACT and AP courses. International students can directly register for standardized examinations in the school.
